Introduction to the Shanghai Municipal Police Files

By Dr. Marcia R. Ristaino

This guide introduces a large collection of crucial documentary material for the study of modern Chinese history. Opened for research in the 1980s, the Shanghai Municipal Police (SMP) files offer researchers the opportunity to explore a unique period in the history of Shanghai, the birthplace and setting for individuals and movements seminal to China's struggle toward a modern existence. This rare, internationally important collection is likely to be unduplicated in historical archives.

Description of the Shanghai Municipal Police Files

The SMP files represent a large portion of the archives of the British-run municipal police force based in Shanghai's former International Settlement. This force was established shortly after the formation in 1854 of the settlement's presiding body, the Shanghai Municipal Council. The files are, for the most part, the records of the SMP Special Branch, which investigated and reported on alleged subversive activities and maintained peace and stability in the International Settlement.

The time period covered by the SMP files extends from 1894 to 1949, although the most extensive coverage is provided by the Special Branch dossiers ("D" files), which date from 1929 to 1949 but concentrate on the years between 1929 and 1944. Good subject coverage between 1916 and 1929 ("IO" files) also exists, but the volume of reports in this time period is not as large.

Access to the rich contents of this collection has been lacking for both the filmed and paper versions of the SMP files. The pages of descriptive material that follow this introduction are the result of the months-long labor of the staff of the National Archives, which examined each file in the hard-copy version of the SMP files and noted the principal subject matter of each one. Although this aid to finding materials in the collection does not provide the detail, standardization, and cross-referencing of material found in a formal index, it does provide a useful means of identifying and locating material included in the SMP files. It is important to remember, however, that the guide was developed from the paper version of the collection and not from the microfilm, because there are instances where the film does not contain materials listed in the hard copy, and vice versa. Nevertheless, until an index is prepared that indicates the disparities between the two versions, this guide is the best means of locating materials in this large and important collection.

Another aspect of the guide material that needs clarification concerns the Willoughby Collection, which is listed in the following pages but does not appear in the microfilm version of the SMP files. This material was prepared as a separate collection under the direction of Major General Charles A. Willoughby, chief of military intelligence on General Douglas MacArthur's Far Eastern Command staff, in order to document the nature and extent of the Richard Sorge espionage network. The compilers of this separate collection drew their materials from the SMP files. Therefore, materials selected for the Willoughby Collection appear in, but are dispersed throughout, the microfilm and hard-copy versions of the SMP files.

A significant portion of the SMP Files concerns registration cards and certificates for White Russian emigres residing in Shanghai. Members of this large émigré community were required to register both under the foreign bao chia system established by the Japanese and with the Russian Emigrants Committee of Shanghai. Their registration cards and certificates, dating from 1940 to 1945, contain photographs and biographical information and exist only on microfilm. The Tsingtao foreign registration cards, included with the SMP files and described at the end of this guide, became incorporated into the SMP files during the U.S. Army's filming process.

The collection is housed currently in the Military Archives Division of the National Archives, Washington, DC, as Record Group 263. It is available both in original, hardcopy form (comprising 119 archive boxes) and on 69 reels of microfilm. The microfilm version was prepared circa 1950 by the U. S. Army Far East Command. It is available for purchase and has been acquired already by research universities both in the United States and abroad.

The Special Branch of the Shanghai Municipal Police was charged with providing an orderly environment for foreign trade and commerce. This task required the timely gathering of information on areas of potential instability threatening the municipality's economic development and political calm. The Special Branch's prime targets included political demonstrations, strikes, labor and social unrest, foreign and domestic subversive activities, and areas of dispute between the International Settlement and the Chinese government. In essence, these were intelligence-gathering responsibilities, and the extensive amount of information generated makes the SMP files a unique and very valuable repository of information on diverse subjects of significant interest to historians and political scientists studying China. In fact, for the purposes of scholarship, the Special Branch records are very likely the most useful portion of the entire SMP archives.

Key Research Areas

The SMP files include coverage of demonstrations, of which many were inspired by the poor treatment of Chinese workers in foreign-owned mills and factories. Labor activities receive extensive treatment and often include detailed reports describing the leadership, organization, and membership of labor unions as well as indications of their connections with Chinese Communist or Comintern personnel. Reports on strikes often contain sample handbills, lists of demands, records of negotiations, and, finally, settlements.

The SMP made Communist activity a prime target of concern. The files include extensive reports on Comintern agents and operations, Soviet espionage, and Chinese Communist Party organizations, methods, programs, and personnel. The police frequently carried out raids on suspected Communist bases in Shanghai. The files contain descriptions of the documents, literature, and equipment uncovered during these raids, along with interrogation reports of those arrested.

Refugee matters also occupied police attention. The large numbers of White Russian and Jewish refugees fleeing war, revolution, and pogroms in the Soviet Union were augmented by waves of Chinese escaping battlefields in North China. In the late 1930s refugee camps were filled with Jews exiting Central and Eastern Europe.' The police reported regularly on these refugee populations and regarded the camps as potential centers of Communist subversion. Police reports also reflected the careful attention given to Sino-foreign issues such as the attitudes of the Chinese Ratepayers Association, the expansion of foreign authority into extra-settlement territory, and organizations calling for retrocession of the foreign settlements in China.

An extensive collection of material is devoted to coverage of the massive Shanghai National Salvation Movement, which emerged in response to the Japanese threat. Reports on this movement include listings of the major National Salvation organizations, their leaders, members, addresses, political character, and examples of some prominent National Salvation publications. The files also detail Sino-Japanese relations and hostilities, including police station situation reports and accounts of troop strength and military maneuvers; reports on Japanese political leaders and organizations before and after the takeover of the International Settlement; and Korean residents and their activities.

The SMP Special Branch staff closely followed Chinese political matters both locally and on a national scale. Files exist on the New Life Movement, the Blue Shirts Society, and on organizational and leadership aspects of the Chinese Nationalist government. Chinese commercial and banking transactions in Shanghai are noted, as are the activities of gang leaders and underworld societies. SMP branches followed incidents of crime, terrorism, kidnapping, white slavery, and prostitution, thus producing extensive reports on these sensational activities, which proliferated in Shanghai. Although this aspect of police work tends to draw attention, associated as it is with the municipality's old and glamorous image, the number of reports on these matters is quite small compared with other coverage.

Another characteristic of the SMP files that makes them unusually valuable to the researcher is that many files are organized around a topic and contain several kinds of source materials. For example, reports on major strikes, such as at the Shanghai Power Company or the Mayar Silk Weaving Factory, include SMP memorandums covering the primary issues, events, leaders, and organizations. Other strike-related materials also are included: interrogation reports of participants, handbills, translations of the major Chinese newspaper coverage, and clippings from the English-language press. The Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury, Shanghai Times, China Press, and North China Daily News were key sources scanned and clipped by the police. Reports from these press sources are not likely to be available in other archival collections.

Organization of the SMP Special Branch

The Special Branch underwent several reorganizations in response to the changing character and requirements of policing the International Settlement. In general, however, the Special Branch maintained the following sections throughout most of its history: intelligence, which focused on activities in the Chinese community and served as a liaison with the Chinese police forces; a foreign unit, which investigated Comintern activities and those of the Russian, Jewish, Japanese, Korean, and other foreign communities; an Indian unit, established in 1927, which investigated and reported on that community; a licensing unit, which administered the licensing of boardinghouses and observed shipping; and censorship, with one unit responsible for press translations and the other for film and theater censorship.' The translation and censorship units translated pertinent articles from the Chinese-language daily press, issuing morning and afternoon editions; by 1940 these units censored all Chinese-language materials before their publication. In addition, they scrutinized the English-language press for "offensive" material. One section, staffed by Koreans, reviewed Japanese-language newspapers and periodicals for items of interest to the Shanghai Municipal Council.

The record-keeping methods of these police units seemed to vary in response to the level of activity under each unit's charge. For example, if a labor disturbance took place, reports on its developments were to be forwarded to the officer in charge of the Special Branch (T. V. Givens during the 1930s) accompanied by the available literature, handbills, or posters. This material would be summarized for inclusion in the "Daily State," which went to SMP headquarters. In addition, units of the Special Branch submitted monthly reports, which then were used to prepare the annual report of the entire Special Branch. Many examples of these reports are contained in the SMP files.

Major Historical Events Affecting Shanghai and the SMP

Shanghai provided the setting for numerous historical movements and events that helped determine the role and function of the SMP. Shanghai became a treaty port as designated by the 1842 Treaty of Nanking. The Shanghai Municipal Council was established in 1854 to preside over the growing International Settlement with support from the SMP.

In the early decades of the twentieth century, Shanghai became a center of nationalist sentiment and expression, first with the student response to the Peking-originated May Fourth 1919 Movement and then with the ensuing anti-Japanese boycott. The Chinese Communist Party, founded in the French Concession in 1921, began efforts to organize labor unions and strikes. Against this background, the broader Chinese community began to press for representation on the Shanghai Municipal Council. On May 30, 1925, the SMP suppressed a massive demonstration protesting the killing of a Chinese worker in a Japanese mill in Shanghai. This demonstration precipitated a general strike of students, workers, and merchants, as well as anti-Japanese and anti-British boycotts. The following year, Chinese were admitted to the Shanghai Municipal Council, and the Mixed Court system was replaced by the Provisional Court, an important step toward judicial autonomy.

In April 1927, Chiang Kai-shek struck against the Communist-led revolutionary movement in Shanghai, arresting and executing its leaders and destroying its organizations. Anti-Communist and Comintern activities and programs became major shared concerns for the new government and International Settlement authorities. In July, legislation established the municipal government of the Greater Shanghai Municipality. Responding to increased Chinese anti-Japanese activities, Japanese military forces bombed and attacked industrial districts and inflicted great loss of life and property in what became known as the Shanghai Incident. While the economy declined and Chinese governmental censorship increased, the broad-based National Salvation Movement, aimed at saving the country from Japanese domination, expanded to include most segments of Shanghai society. The arrest of its leading spokesmen, the so-called Seven Gentlemen, played a role in bringing about the Second United Front between the Kuomintang and the Chinese Communists.

War against Japan broke out in July 1937, and Japanese attacks on Chinese districts in Shanghai began shortly thereafter. The International Settlement was occupied by Japanese troops the day after the attack on Pearl Harbor. In 1943 the settlement was reestablished when the foreign powers, including Japan, renounced their extraterritorial rights and privileges on Shanghai.

Nationalist troops entered the municipality in September 1945. Inflation skyrocketed, and repression against liberal elements in Shanghai escalated. Emergency measures were enacted, but the situation continued to deteriorate. On May 25, 1949, Chinese Communist forces entered Shanghai, which the Nationalists abandoned without a fight.

History of the SMP Files and Their Release

The holdings of the Special Branch files expanded steadily during the 1920s and the 1930s. After the Japanese took over the International Settlement in 1941, the SMP continued to manage and add to the files without Japanese interference. Apparently, the Japanese chose to rely on their own civilian and military organizations to collect information, probably because the SMP files were prepared in English. With the retrocession to China of the International Settlement at the end of World War II, the Chinese municipal police assumed authority over the SMP archives. During the ensuing civil war, the Chinese municipal police, like the Japanese, relied on their own channels for information, thus leaving the SMP files largely intact.

In the spring of 1949, as Chinese Communist forces closed in on Shanghai, U.S. personnel negotiated with Chinese authorities to remove the SMP files to a safer location. A U.S. unit attached to the U.S. Navy's Sixth Fleet based in Tsingtao, the External Survey Detachment 44, loaded the SMP files onto trucks for subsequent transport by sea to Japan. A typhoon during the voyage caused some of the material to be lost. Eventually, the SMP files came to the United States and were housed at the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). In the early 1980s the CIA transferred the records to the National Archives, where they were opened to the public.

Notes

1 The outcome of Willoughby's use of the SMP files was Shanghai Conspiracy: The Sorge Spy Ring (New York: E. P. Dutton, 1952).

is working in the files in preparation for his forthcoming Friends of the Chinese Revolution: American Supporters of China's Communists, 1929-1939.

SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL POLICE FILES, 1894 – 1947

For the most part, the files in this collection belonged to the Special Branch of the Shanghai Municipal Police (SMP). They cover various concerns of the police responsible for the foreign concession: political matters (primarily Communism/anti-Communism); confidential enquiries from various governmental authorities regarding persons of different nationalities; reports regarding terrorist acts, serious crimes, movements of criminals and persons of doubtful reputation; labor disputes; reports regarding the different communities of foreigners; the Sino-Japanese Conflict; anti-Japanese activities; activities of Chinese authorities in the Western Area of Shanghai; arrival and departure of prominent persons, etc.

(FORMERLY) SECURITY CLASSIFIED INVESTIGATION FILES, 1916-1947

The dossiers are arranged numerically within each collection. Each collection is identified by a letter or letters which precedes the number of the dossier. The letters and their significance are as follow:

LETTER........MEANING
D.............Reports of Special Branch made between 1929-1949
IO........... Reports made 1916-1929
MIS.......... Reports made 1943-1945 during Japanese occupation
U............ Reports made 1940-1945 during Japanese occupation

(FORMERLY) SECURITY CLASSIFIED RECORDS RELATING TO ESPIONAGE ACTIVITIES IN SHANGHAI, 1926-1948 ("Willoughby Collection")
The bound volumes in archives boxes 1-11 represent papers extracted by G-2 from the SMP files. An index, description or summary is found in the General Headquarters Far East Command Military Intelligence Section, General Staff publication entitled "Appendices to A Partial Documentation of the Sorge Espionage Case, MISCELLANEOUS RECORDS SPECIAL BRANCH SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL POLICE, Consecutive Exhibit No. 32, Part II, section A (G-2 documents No. 1 to 40) and section B (G-2 documents No. 41-105) in box 11. This index may serve as a partial, but not complete index, to the dossiers. The bound volumes were given to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee by Major General C.A. Willoughby (Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, GHQ, FEC) in May 1951, whence it was eventually transferred to the Central Intelligence Agency.

When these records were accessioned by the National Archives in 1979 there were two British government studies pertaining to the Hillaire Noulens Soviet espionage case which had not been cleared for access: Those two studies are now available. In addition, the index to "the Willoughby Collection" was also security classified. A declassified copy of that index was received by the National Archives in March, 1988.

The microfilm in boxes 1-3 and 1-4 are the original and a copy. They do not exactly duplicate the paper collection. In some instances a dossier exists in paper which does not appear on the microfilm and in other instances the microfilm contains dossiers for which there is no paper equivalent. This statement pertains to the D, 10, N and CID series dossiers; apparently the others were not filmed.

TEXTUAL RECORDS

This listing of the contents of the paper records was originally made in approximately 1980 by staff of the National Archives and may contain some errors of omission or may include descriptions of materials which do not exist. If any such errors are noted, please bring them to the attention of the NNMR staff.

MICROFILM COPY OF REGISTRATION CARDS OF RUSSIAN EMIGRANTS' 1940 - 1945

References to the Foreign Pao Chia pertain to an organization which was established during the Japanese occupation to facillitate the compulsory registration of all foreign and Chinese residents. The system was continued by the succeeding Chinese Nationalist government. These records consisted of cards containing a photograph and personal particulars. Only the cards of the Russian emigrants appear to have been microfilmed; no original cards survive.

MICROFILM COPY OF REGISTRATION CERTIFICATES OF THE RUSSIAN EMIGRANTS COMMITTEE, 1944-1945

The Russian Emigrants Committee of Shanghai required the annual registration of all Russian emigrants (White Russians) who resided in Shanghai or entered the city to reside there. It is believed that originally the registration was effected so that the Committee could offer a type of quasi-diplomatic protection to the white Russians who had no legal or official diplomatic status and were considered stateless; during the period of Soviet "amnesty" after 1946, many of the former Russian emigrants accepted Soviet passports. During the Japanese occupation, the registration of the Russian emigrants by the Committee was used by the Japanese as a control device. In addition to registering with the Committee during the years 1940-1945, the emigrants were required also to register under the Pao Chia system. The Russian Committee disbanded in 1947 because most of the Russian Emigrants had either accepted Soviet passports or had departed from Shanghai under IRO auspices. The paper copies of the registration certificates no longer exist.
